- One of the things that people clearly did not understand about the CSRTs, is that notwithstanding what Secretary England said, that anybody found not to be an enemy combatant will be released, that's not true. And it was never true. And I think at least people higher up in the chain clearly understood that statement that he had made not to be true at the time that it was made. And that was for the simple reason that the entire CSRT process was advisory. That is that you had the senior civilian executive, under who OARDEC operated, and he would get the results of the CSRTs, and he could choose to accept them or to disregard them.
