

- Wave hello. Come on. Come on. No, no, no, no, no. Ugh, never. They'll never do it when you really want them to. Hi, I'm Billie Campbell, Glen Campbell's wife, and this is our youngest son Kane. Ready to wave hi yet, Kane? Oh, he's gonna wave hi now. (Billie laughs) This is our daughter Kelli, who's nine.

- Pleased to meet you.

- Girls always take after their mothers.

- Hi.

- That was Travis, our son. He's five. But Kane, oops, Kane here, he's just getting to the age now where he's more fun than ever to watch, really quite active and very inquisitive, and right now, he must be trying to tell us something. Okay, here we go, bring the box to mommy though, okay. This room was planned for Glen's office, but now it's a nursery. So, guess that shows who's boss around here, right boss? Okay. Just in case you haven't guessed by now, this is a Pampers commercial, because this little guy is a Pampers baby. I think they're just the greatest thing since babies I guess. I tried cloth diapers, and just about every kind of disposable diaper, and Pampers are better than anything I've ever tried. Pampers keep Kane drier than cloth diapers, and that's the important thing. Why mess around with diapers and plastic pants when Pampers do the whole job? Right, boss?
